

Planning for success

How to create your business plan

What's your plan?

A business plan is a written document that formulates the goals and aspirations of a business. It considers the existing characteristics of a business and the scope of opportunities that exist in the marketplace. It should also demonstrate a 'path to victory' for accomplishing company targets.

A short-form business plan is a cut-down version of a traditional business plan, albeit with a similar structure. It outlines what your business does and how it will generate revenue, as well as how you will execute your strategies.

Why have a plan?

A clear and concise business plan will help you organise and prioritise your ideas. But remember, it doesn't need to be complicated. As Albert Einstein once said: "If you can't explain it to a six-year-old, you don't understand it yourself".

A well-articulated plan will be easy to share with other stakeholders and is more likely to become a living document – one that can change over time and evolve with new information. You should consider how each part of the business plan will operate both by itself and in relation to the other components of your plan.

If you fail to plan, you plan to fail...

Key components for a business plan

| Mission statement                 | A short statement that identifies the purpose of the business and youroperations. If you have completed your Client Value Proposition, you canuse this to create your mission statement.   |
|-----------------------------------|--|
| Executive summary                 | This briefly highlights your current position and your growth plan for the year. You should consider what you will need to change to keep growing at the same pace or faster than you have been.   |
| Managementstructure           | This sets out reporting lines and provides clarity on job roles. Make sure you consider the interaction of each role with other roles.   |
| Goals                             | It can help to break your goals down into short and long-term priorities soyou can allocate the right resources to reach them.   |
| Key people plan                   | Helps you identify and nurture your most important professional relationships – for instance with employees and external dealer group contacts.  |
| Compliance and riskmanagement | This sets out the processes and procedures that must be in place notonly to ensure you remain licensed, but also to help you avoid claims onprofessional indemnity insurance.  |
| SWOT analysis                     | Encompasses four components: strengths, weaknesses, opportunitiesand threats. Strengths and weaknesses relate primarily to your firm andits capabilties. When thinking of opportunities and threats, you shouldconsider the external environment that may affect your business.  |
| Product andservice delivery   | This specifies the products and services that you provide to clients, andwill enable you to compare yourself to competitor offerings to make sureyour offering is compelling. Consider: does your offering solve real clientissues, and do you have the capacity to deliver the promised services?   |
| Service providersummary       | Review your major service providers to confirm they are still best of breedand competitive on pricing.   |
| Marketing plan                    | Not all techniques are equally successful for marketing a firm's services.In your marketing plan, include the strategies that will be most effectivefor both your existing clients and potential new ones. Without a well-considered marketing plan you may end up wasting considerabletime, money and effort. Your plan should focus on the ways your clientsnaturally find your business, so think carefully about who your ideal clientis, as this will affect the channels that are likely to be most effective. |
| Financials                        | Consider your previous year's financial performance and estimatewhere you think you will be over the next few years. Throughout thebusiness plan, you may identify several ways to increase revenue whilereducing expenses.  |
